Rhythmic End

Johanna Stephens
Concordia University- Portland

Follow this and additional works at: http://commons.cu-portland.edu/promethean
Part of the Fiction Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://commons.cu-portland.edu/promethean/vol15/iss1/37

This Story is brought to you for free and open access by CU Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Promethean by an authorized administrator of CU Commons. For more information, please contact libraryadmin@cu-portland.edu.
The soloist's violin string snaps, and with it comes an explosive silence—a absence of sound that presses on the eardrums and pushes needles into the inner ear. It's ruined—everything is ruined in a burst of color. It's so bright and it sends beads of light shimmering down from the ceiling, catching in the audience's hair and being inhaled into its collective lungs. The concert has ended, and it can't be played over. This beautiful failure, devoid of sound but overwhelmingly abundant in vision and emotion, brings back an old thought, a potent idea—

The end of one thing is the beginning of another. The end of sound is the beginning of color. The end of color is the beginning of the feeling that comes from hearing the most beautiful piece of music. It fills you, lifts you, sends you soaring through each gently rising crescendo and bold fortissimo. At the same time, your heart is cracking into tiny shards of glass that stick in the palms, shoot through the veins and emerge where the heart used to be, continuing the cycle of taking and giving back.

The audience pulses towards the exits. The silence is still pressing and the light is still shimmering. Their souls are still soaring and their hearts are still shredding. This concert's end is the start of tonight—the soloist lost her audience, but gave them the gift of a blank slate, a way to erase wrongs and create rights. They won't remember the exact moment they received it, but they will remember the burst of color that came when the string first snapped.

I'd rather have a frozen heart
Or one that's made of stone
Than live another day with this emptiness
Calling my chest its home
I've tried to fill it so many times
With so many different pegs
But if this hole inside of me is round
The pegs are always square
Or triangular

Octagonal
Pentagonal
Bottle shaped pegs, empty and brown
Belt shaped pegs leaving welts on my back
Knife shaped pegs with red coated blades
I try to fill the hole with pegs made of light
   With cross shaped pegs
   Or pentagrams
   Or tiny graven images

Yet each peg the hole devours
A mouth with a thousand peg teeth
Each peg becomes a part of me
   Of the darkness
   The emptiness
   The hollowness
Dwelling inside me
And soon the pegs will all run out
And I'll be hollow still
An empty shell—once a man
Now no more than a corpse
   A holey ghost
   Vacant eyes
   And broken pegs