1-1-2004

Safety: Past and Present

Mark Brittain
Concordia University - Portland

Follow this and additional works at: http://commons.cu-portland.edu/promethean

Part of the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://commons.cu-portland.edu/promethean/vol12/iss2/6

This Poem is brought to you for free and open access by CU Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Promethean by an authorized administrator of CU Commons. For more information, please contact libraryadmin@cu-portland.edu.
SAFETY: PAST AND PRESENT

Mark Brittain

I. B-52s

I was five when God thundered
From California skies and out of Pratt & Whitney engines
To carry dads across the ocean to protect us.

Monkey bars were the best place to watch the take-offs
That spawned vibrations from the hot summer metal
Through jeans into guts to dance through our lungs
And rise in echoing exultant shrieks.

A sister, fourteen, good as grown-up,
Told us where they went, our fathers and God,
And what happened to mothers and children over there.
What if the others had planes, too? She left us, sad.

The chaplain explained, and moms and teachers,
Only soldiers died, and that was good enough.
So we went to sister’s room and tore her
Doors poster from the wall in our own thundering shouts.

II. Street Scene

It shouted in marquee language,
“SNOWING SOON”
Sign of the sale-crazy auto dealer.

Twenty-first century seer
Prophesying white blanket profits
From his SUV inventory, for safety’s sake.

The rear-view exposed swaying crescents,
The kid’s heads, barely cresting the seat back,
And I wondered if I was letting them down.

We’re bad parents, I told my wife,
They deserve more from us and I pointed
To the oracle as we passed.

First, try driving the speed limit
She commanded and laughed
Into the night.