A Knight Known

Zachary Rothell
Concordia University - Portland

Follow this and additional works at: http://commons.cu-portland.edu/promethean

Part of the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation
Rothell, Zachary (2017) "A Knight Known," The Promethean: Vol. 25 : Iss. 1 , Article 42.
Available at: http://commons.cu-portland.edu/promethean/vol25/iss1/42

This Poem is brought to you for free and open access by CU Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Promethean by an authorized administrator of CU Commons. For more information, please contact libraryadmin@cu-portland.edu.
A Knight Known

Zachary Rothell

To reap and sow through fields furrowed,
A lonely knight hath pondered.
To what vile end does glory play
In a world drowned in both night and day.

To be a harbinger of what always comes,
To do the deed that must be done.
Oath sworn thus, bound to the end,
Nothing can overcome.
And to sit here, now, gazing out at the field,
Looking at those oblivious,
Unknown to all but themselves,
And me.

Their happiness a stream that keeps flowing,
Joyous and swollen in their own desire,
Must it come to them as well?

Yesterday, the man a town over
Two days past, the craven hidden in the woods
And now them.

They know me not, nor ever will.
I am neither a burden nor a concern, So that
For where they are, I am not
And when I am, they have gone.
Though the journey slow,
With all I know to come and go,
Maybe I will find myself.