I Wish I Was Your

I wish I was your harbor, there where you rest.
I wish I was your boatswain, to help pass the tumult's test.
I wish I was your cannon, to defend you strong and sure.
I wish I was your hull, to wrap around your curves.
 I wish I was your patron, to aid you in your quest.
 I wish I was your sovereign, to share in your success.
 I wish I was your rudder, to be fixed by your command.
 I wish I was your wheel, to be held within your hands.
I wish I was your current, to steady and give you drift.
I wish I was your watchman, faithful to my shift.
I wish I was your starboard, much more than just your right.
I wish I was your dawn, to melt away the night.
 I wish I was your moon, to keep vigil at vulnerable times.
 I wish I was your sun, to see your joy at my shine.
 I wish I was your wind, to drive you glad and fast.
 I wish I was your stars, winking at you fore and aft.
I wish I was your maiden, to wait with tough tenacity.
I wish I was your mother, to hope you would hold fast with me.
I wish I was your father, proud of your travels and gall.
I wish I was your artisan, to paint your beauty, scars and all.
 I wish I was your port, to be seen as all that's left.
 I wish I was your destination, the reason for your quest.
 I wish I was your hope at home, to bring a smile to you.
 I wish I was your religion, the structure of your truths.
I wish I was your lover, yearning with expectancy.
I wish I was your life, to find the best in me.
