A Cat

Liana Parks

A cat sits at a window
Watching the world go by
His yellow eyes go up
His yellow eyes go down
He turns his head from side to side
And grooms his little paw.
The cat sits in the window
Inside a nice warm house
And watches the children run by
Laughing at their foolishness of staying in the cold.
Joined by another cat
My royal kitty sighs
And leaves his station to find a perch
Somewhat more dignified.
No cat sits at the window now
Their amusement all used up
And now I suppose they go
To lie by the fire and rest.
