Insurmountable Mountain

Angehyka Cava

Life is a pile of garbage.
In a never-ending cycle, the refuse collects,
spreading throughout this world like a plague.
Too much for one scrap to truly make a difference.
Once it is disposed of, it will be forgotten.
Buried among what everybody else has already discarded,
lost in an overpopulated world,
never to be seen again.
Like waste,
all of our problems keep on piling,
polluting our atmosphere.
As we throw it out, push it away,
we create a formidable, unsightly mountain of trash.
Eventually that mountain becomes insurmountable.
